Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: the examiner maintains the rejection that it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to remove the iron core of the inductance coils in the dart board apparatus disclosed by Fuscone without destroying the functionality of the overall invention. As previously stated, the purpose of the iron cores is to enhance the magnetic field created by the presence of the dart however an inductance coil does not require the presence of the iron cores in order to function. As further evidence of this the examiner refers the applicant to the invention disclosed by Gordon et al. (US 5,419,565), which teaches an electrical device for detecting the location of impact of a missile coming into contact with a target analogous to a dart board for detecting the impact position of an incoming dart. In one embodiment of the invention disclosed by Gordon, coils are utilized as detection means (Fig. 5), wherein "The coils may be air wound or, to achieve a higher field, wound around a ferromagnetic core" (Col. 5, lines 1-3). Thus, applicant's arguments that removing the iron cores in the invention disclosed by Fuscone destroys the overall functionality of the invention is not persuasive and the examiner maintains that it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to remove the iron cores in the inductance coils disclosed by Fuscone.
